A landmark in flames

The famous spire atop Notre Dame Cathedral collapses as the structure's roof is engulfed in flames Monday in central Paris. The church's structure was saved, Paris' fire chief said, after firefighters managed to stop the blaze from spreading. The structure, which dates to the 14th century, had been undergoing a $6.8 million renovation. Story on Page 4. GEOFFROY VAN DER HASSELT/AFP/GETTY

Preparations for music festival kick into high gear

By STACY PARKER
Staff writer

VIRGINIA BEACH — To prepare for what is shaping up to be one of the biggest events in the resort area, the city's beach operations will kick into high gear over the next 10 days.

Hundreds of trash cans will be deployed and two six-foot tall sand berms will be built this week for the three-day Something in the Water festival April 26-28.

It's all hands on deck in the Public Works department.

"It's going to be like the Patriotic Festival, a July Fourth, plus a little bit more," said director Mark Johnson.

The City Council will be briefed on the support services Tuesday.

Restrooms/port-a-johns

The city's public restrooms on 2nd, 17th, 24th, 30th and 31st streets will remain open 24 hours a day with an attendant. The festival production company will rent hundreds of portable toilets from private companies.

The 5th Street stage area will have 332 portable restrooms, 21 ADA restrooms and 60 hand washing stations in three areas. In addition, the VIP areas will have trailers with an additional 22 restrooms.

Trash

Hundreds of city trash cans will be provided for the festival, which will contract private trash collection services.

Outside of the festival parameters, Public Works will collect trash on the beach, the Boardwalk, Atlantic Avenue, resort side streets and park areas between the Boardwalk and Atlantic Avenue.

Recycling

Recycling cans will be on the beach inside the festival areas, and organizers have contracted recycling services. Tidewater Fibre Corp. is under contract with the city to handle recycling cans on the Boardwalk.

Street sweep

Street sweeping began early Tuesday morning, a week earlier than most years. The machines pick up dirt on Atlantic Avenue and the Boardwalk.

Sand berms

Public Works will build sand berms parallel to the ocean at 5th and 20th streets beginning this week. The 20th Street berm has already been started. Berms offer storm protection and help define the event space, Johnson said.

If love is in the air, it's covered in pollen like everything else

Allergies triggered? Blame it on the trees.

By LEE TOLLIVER
Staff writer

Just about everything is covered in yellowish green pollen these days.

It's the time of year when plants unleash the stuff that helps them reproduce, coating our world with it.

And by the echoing sound of sneezes and sniffles, it's really getting to a bunch of you.

While pollens can be around almost any day of the year, spring is the worst. This region is notorious for it.

"This area is a tough area," said Lindsey Moore, a doctor at the Children's Hospital of the King's Daughters who specializes in asthma, allergies and immunology. "We have relatively mild temperatures and a lot of different pollens."

Tom Benson queried The Virginian-Pilot's Glad You Asked initiative about the pollen, noting "I don't even have any trees in my yard, yet everything is covered."

He asked: Where does it come from?

Pollen is a fine powder that plants use to germinate, which happens when it's blown off the stamen of flowers and lands on the pistil. Pollenization happens when the wind blows, but also when insects seeking nectar fly from flower to flower.

Moore said the stuff we see is tree pollen. Pollen.com, which reports pollen counts, says right now it's oak and pine.

The pine likely isn't the stuff that has you wearing out a box of Kleenex every other day. Blame the oak, along with maple, alder and elm trees for those symptoms. Later, when tree pollen starts to taper off, blame the grass.

"There is some overlap in this area," Moore said. "There is some grass pollen now to go with the trees."

The show doesn't end when grasses stop germinating — pollen is in the air almost nine months of the year. After trees and grasses come most weeds, followed by ragweed in the late summer until the first frost.

Global warming isn't helping. Johns Hopkins professor and allergist Corinne Keet told Pollen.com that the pollen season is starting earlier and lasting longer.

Former state delegate dies after battle with rare cancer

Howard Copeland focused on the people of Norfolk

By DAVE RESS
Staff writer

People may never know exactly how much former Del. Howard Copeland gave back to the people of Norfolk, his friends said.

Copeland, 75, died last week after a 32-month battle with a rare form of cancer.

But until the very end, he was the one whose grace and spirit heartened his friends at his twice-monthly, Friday morning men's Bible study, former councilman Randy Wright recalled.

"He demonstrated a lot of courage to us, and his absolute faith," Wright said. "He acted as he believed. He believed in something and he took action on it."

As the former delegate did when his beloved wife Marylin told him about the "Hula Hoop Lady," whose habit of dancing on the median strip at Wards Corner to the music of a very loud radio got her into trouble.

Marylin Copeland got to know the Hula Hoop Lady through her own work, helping people with brain injuries. And when she told her husband about the case, he sprang into action — for free — and fought for her from district court through to an appeal to Circuit Court, where her charge of disturbing the peace was withdrawn.

"He did a lot of work for free. He helped a lot of people," Wright said.

In the obituary that he wrote for himself, Copeland said that after he received his diagnosis of cancer, he decided "this is a golden opportunity to share the grace and power of God in my life." He added that he believed his reaction was "consistent with the serenity he had gained through Alcoholics Anonymous," and shared his faith with others at M.D. Anderson Cancer Center, the National Institutes of Health and the airplanes he would travel on for treatment.

A Norfolk native, Copeland went into the U.S. Coast Guard after his graduation from Columbia University in 1967. He served in Vietnam aboard USCGC Androscoogin as Combat Information Officer when the ship destroyed an enemy infiltration vessel during the Tet Offensive.

After four years on active duty, he served 22 in the Coast Guard Reserve, retiring as a captain. He attended the Naval War College at Newport, Rhode Island, was named the outstanding student in a class of 300 senior officers at the National Defense University at Fort McNair in Washington, D.C., and was decorated with 21 medals and service ribbons.

His active duty service completed, Copeland went to the University of Virginia School of Law and began practicing law in his Norfolk hometown in 1975, the same year the Virginia Jaycees named him one of five outstanding Virginians.

He launched his political career with a run for Norfolk City Council in 1978, campaigning under the slogan, "Howard Copeland wants more than your vote."

He wants your ideas." He lost that race, but was elected to the House of Delegates in 1980 and served through the 1995 session.

His focus there was on Norfolk and the people who sent him to Richmond. The story of a constituent named Harvey, a recovering problem gambler, prompted Copeland to push for using some lottery proceed for programs to help gambling addicts. He worked on doing away with tolls on the Norfolk-Virginia Beach Expressway, a change that finally came the year after he lost his final bid for re-election.

Copeland was an early advocate for better management of the crab fishery. "He was talking about ecology when that wasn't politically easy," said former Del. Jay DeBoer, who remembers being a freshman legislator in 1983, when the slightly more experienced Copeland took him and other newly elected House members under his wing.

"We used to talk about surf wars, not turf wars," when Copeland made his case over the objections of watermen and their legislative supporters, DeBoer said.

"He was a good, strong legislator. He had a strong law enforcement bent," DeBoer said. Copeland was also particularly interested in watercraft safety, pushing for tighter laws on boating under the influence and unsafe use of jet-skis.

"Everybody liked Howard," DeBoer said. "I don't recall Howard ever saying a partisan word."

Former Majority Leader Dick Cranwell said Copeland was unafraid to stake out his own positions on issues.

"He was fighter, he was absolutely unrelenting," Cranwell said.

"If he didn't see what he wanted, you knew he'd be back there again next year," Cranwell added, recalling Copeland's years of efforts on the toll issue.

"He loved Tidewater," Cranwell added.

Whitt Clement, who also served with Copeland, said he "was very much his own man. He was very conscientious, and he worked hard for his constituents. ... He fought hard for every bill he brought."

Copeland also served as special assistant to the attorney general from 1974 to 1975 and was a special justice from 2015 to 2019, presiding over cases involving mental health.

He was a member of the Virginia State Bar, the Norfolk and Portsmouth Bar Association, Reserve Officers Association of the United States, Military Officers Association of America, American Legion, and Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Copeland's wife Marylin and oldest son Eric predeceased him, and he is survived by his youngest son Joshua Copeland of Virginia Beach.

Funeral services will be held at noon Wednesday in Trinity Lutheran Church. Burial will follow at Forest Lawn Cemetery. The family will receive friends in the Norfolk Chapel of H.D. Oliver Funeral Apts. today from 5 to 7 p.m.

Campaign finance reports released

By DAVE RESS
Staff writer

The first round of campaign finance reports signaled some expected — and not so expected — hot races in Hampton Roads for the next General Assembly.

Among the expected ones: Newport News School Board member Shelly Simmonds, making her third effort to unseat Del. David Yancey, R-Newport News.

She has raised $71,943 in the first quarter of the year, making her the top fundraiser among House of Delegates candidates outside of Northern Virginia, according to an early compilation by the Virginia Public Access Project. The deadline for filing reports was midnight, but as of the end of business day report by VPAP, Yancey had not filed.

Another hotly contested race is likely in the Virginia Beach state Senate seat held by Republican Frank Wagner, who is retiring. Del. Cheryl Turpin, D-Virginia Beach, fighting a three-way race for the party nomination, has jumped far ahead of her rivals, raising $100,366 during the first three months of the year — although that includes some $59,895 rolled over from her old House of Delegates warchest. Susan Hippen, another Democrat in the race, raised $13,665.

The third Democrat, Kim Howard, hadn't filed in time to be included in the VPAP compilation. On the GOP side, Jennifer Kiggans raised $17,250 and Carolyn Weens, $2,960.

Democrat Philip Hernandez, who is challenging Del. Robert Bloxom, R-Accomack, raised $48,079 during the quarter. After covering some early campaign expenses, that gives him a fund of $41,844, which is slightly larger than Bloxom's $40,844.

In Virginia Beach, Democrat Nancy Guy outraised Del. Chris Stolle, as she took in $35,587 to his $29,005. Stolle's campaign fund, however, is more than twice as large as hers.

In Hampton, School Board member Martha Mugler, who is seeking the Democratic nomination to succeed retiring Del. Gordon Helsel, R-Poquoson, raised $30,007. Her primary opponent, the 2017 Democratic nominee Michael Wade, raised $15,468. Republican Colleen Holcomb had not filed by the end of the business day.

The biggest fund campaign warchest, as so often over the years, was Senate Majority Leader Thomas K. Norment Jr.'s, which now stands at just over $1 million. The James City County Republican typically uses much of his fund to support other Senate Republicans. His challenger, Herb Jones, of New Kent County, hadn't submitted a report in time for the VPAP compilation.

Chef brings Taiwanese fried chicken, bubble waffles to Virginia Beach

By MATTHEW KORFHAGE
Staff writer

On Saturday, a Virginia Beach restaurant underwent a transformation. At the former Capitol Crepe, which opened in June inside Kung Fu Tea at 1949 Lynnhaven Parkway, the crepes are gone.

In their place is a mash-up of Southeast Asian flavors its owner calls "Five Spice cuisine."

Newly rebranded as Five Spice Kitchen, owner David Chiang's new fast-casual concept serves scratch-made Taiwanese popcorn chicken spiced with cinnamon and Sichuan pepper, pork-stuffed scallion pancakes that come off like giant Asian tacos, and Hong Kong bubble waffle cones with ice cream and a world of toppings.

The restaurant is open weekday afternoons starting at 3 p.m., and weekends starting at noon.

"It's mainly Taiwanese — but it has a mixture of Filipino, Hawaiian, Japanese. All that and more. You won't be able to see this food anywhere else in town," said Chiang, who owns two franchises of popular bubble tea mini-chain Kung Fu Tea. Before that, Chiang also helped start restaurants all over Virginia for celebrity Chinese chef Peter Chang.

Chiang had hoped Capitol Crepe could be matched up with each Kung Fu Tea location he opened. But he discovered that even if customers loved his crepes, it's not the sort of food people ate often. When he began adding savory items, he says, his sales tripled.

So he decided to reboot his restaurant.

Five Spice Kitchen boasts a streamlined menu ranging from $7-$11 for rice bowls and specialty items, and carries far-flung influences on each dish.

So a Hawaiian-style spam musubi rice subs out the traditional canned ham for Filipino tocino, then throws in some sweet tofu called inari for good measure. A Japanese-style beef bowl is dubbed "Philly steak," while dumplings hawk to traditional Taiwanese fillings.

Chiang says he tried out different savory dishes for months at Capitol Crepe, before re-opening as Five Spice Kitchen with his most successful plates. He plans to continue serving a mix of specials alongside the regular menu.

And he'll bring back one dish he'd stopped serving early at Capitol Crepes:

Hong Kong bubble waffles.

Bubble waffles are a fairly recent dessert trend across Southeast Asia and the U.S. — ice cream and a world of toppings stuffed into an eggy waffle cone that looks a bit like sweet bubble wrap.

At Five Spice, the cones are available in three flavors of ice cream, with choice of toppings and "drizzle." Or, if you prefer, you can get your waffle cone stuffed with fried chicken.

The cones are difficult to make correctly, and must be made fresh, Chiang says. He took them off Capitol Crepe's menu last summer, worried he was throwing cones away when he couldn't correctly gauge demand. But customers kept asking about them, he says.

"We had it for about a month, but not a lot of people knew about it. But once I took it away, everybody was crazy for it."

Paris stands still as Notre Dame Cathedral sustains ‘colossal damage’ from catastrophic fire

The Washington Post

PARIS — The central spire, roof and much of the interior of Notre Dame Cathedral were obliterated Monday as a catastrophic fire spread within minutes through a building that has stood at the heart of Paris for more than 800 years.

Cathedral spokesman Andre Finot told French media that the building had sustained “colossal damage” and that the Medieval wooden interior — an engineering and artistic marvel that has inspired awe and wonder for the millions who have visited over the centuries — had been gutted.

“Everything is burning,” he said. “Nothing will remain from the frame.”

But late Monday night, officials said that the iconic twin towers that frame the building’s grand entry had been saved, and that the exterior structure of the cathedral had been preserved.

The cathedral has been under renovation, and officials said they were considering the blaze an accident relating to construction. The Paris prosecutor’s office opened an investigation.

No deaths or injuries have yet been reported.

The fire began in the late afternoon, with yellow clouds of smoke billowing into an otherwise perfect blue sky and orange flames assaulting the belfry. As evening began to fall over the city, a gaping hole could be seen where the enormous vaulted roof once had been. Flames continued to lick the night sky as an impromptu chorus in the streets below somberly sang “Ave Maria,” some members falling to their knees.

The heat of the fire could be felt from across the River Seine as firefighters frantically pumped water from cranes and sought to save the priceless works stored and displayed within.

Initial reports in the French press suggested that many of those pieces had already been removed last week during the renovations, and Finot said that the cathedral’s collection of relics and other sacred items, kept in the sacristy, were likely unharmed. “Normally there is no risk of things being burned,” he said.

The rest of the city seemed to stand still as the fire raged, with thousands of passerby watching from the streets below. Many were in tears, looking on in stunned silence. Some filmed the scenes on smartphones and broadcast them across the globe.

Worldwide, scenes of the destruction triggered an outpouring of emotion, with people posting family photos to social media showcasing visits to a building that was built and refined over centuries but burned within hours.

The building, the cornerstone of which was laid in 1163, is the most visited monument in Paris, with more than 12 million people coming each year — nearly double the people who visit the Eiffel Tower. Its intricate stone gargoyles, spires, stained glass and flying buttresses make it one of the great masterpieces of architecture.

French President Emmanuel Macron tweeted: “Notre-Dame of Paris preyed by the flames. The sorrow of an entire nation. Our thoughts with all Catholics and French people. Like all our compatriots, I’m sad tonight to see this part of ourselves burn.”

Macron later visited the scene, watching with others as the structure was engulfed.

The church is both a literal and figurative center of the city: It anchors the Île de la Cité, the island in the Seine River where the first settlements emerged that eventually became the city of Paris. The common distinctions of “Left Bank” and “Right Bank” are in reference to this island.

Until Monday night, Notre Dame had managed to withstand both the elements and the vicissitudes of history that left their mark elsewhere in the French capital: the French Revolution, the Paris Commune, two world wars and Adolf Hitler’s demolition plans in 1944.

Pope Francis issued a statement late on Monday expressing the Vatican’s “shock and sadness” at “the news of the terrible fire that devastated the Cathedral of Notre Dame, a symbol of Christianity in France and in the world.”

“We express closeness to the French Catholics and the people of Paris and we assure our prayers for the firemen and those who are doing everything possible to face this dramatic situation,” the statement read.

“I do not have a strong enough word to express the pain that I feel,” tweeted Paris Mayor Anne Hidalgo.

Many of those gathered at the base of the cathedral Monday were tourists and pilgrims visiting for Easter holidays. Others were local, there to pay their respects.

“I came because we live in Paris and because, well, last week we were all there, having a drink on the steps of the cathedral, enjoying the beautiful flowers in the garden,” said Fatima Marie, a 35-year-old Parisian. “We thought it would be better to be here among friends.”

Donia Hammami, 35, a trade expert in Paris, ran to the scene from her gym nearby when she saw the reports of the blaze. She was in tears in the crowd, watching the cathedral burn.

“For me, this has been an inspiration for so many other churches in Europe from the 14th century onward, in the way it came up with a way to mirror more light,” Hammami said. “It’s been here for all those ages.”

“This is a historic moment for all of us, in the worst possible sense of the term,” she added.

Europe is full of historic structures that have been rebuilt following damage during both war and peacetime. But experts despaired that the loss to Notre Dame was incalculable and unrecoverable.

“It’s not just the medieval features,” tweeted Kate Wiles, a scholar at Kings’ College London. “It’s a palimpsest of work and rework, and building and rebuilding, and we’ve lost all those layers. It’s not just the ‘original’ masterpiece we’re losing, but the culmination of some 900 years of history, which can’t just be rebuilt.”

The spire that collapsed on Monday, for instance, is not an original component of the cathedral. It was added in the nineteenth century, when tastes veered toward a Gothic revival, by the architect Eugène Viollet-le-Duc. The gargoyles — immortalized in Victor Hugo’s classic novel “The Hunchback of Notre Dame” — were likewise added in the nineteenth century.

Throughout French cultural history, Notre Dame has served as a powerful symbol of Paris and of France’s cultural heritage. The writer Anatole France once described it as “heavy as a hippopotamus” but “light as a butterfly.” The painter Marc Chagall depicted it in his canvases, distorted in dream-like haze.

President Trump tweeted his advice to Paris on Monday: “So horrible to watch the massive fire at Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris. Perhaps flying water tankers could be used to put it out. Must act quickly!”

French fire services tweeted in apparent reply that “dropping water by airplane on this type of building could result in the collapse of the entire structure.”

POLLEN

And don't expect spring rains to help. Moore said that the "right" kind of rain — light to moderate with little to no wind — helps lower pollen counts while it's falling.

But stormy rain blasts the stuff out of the flowers and spreads it all around. Heavy rain also causes plants to ramp up their production of pollen.

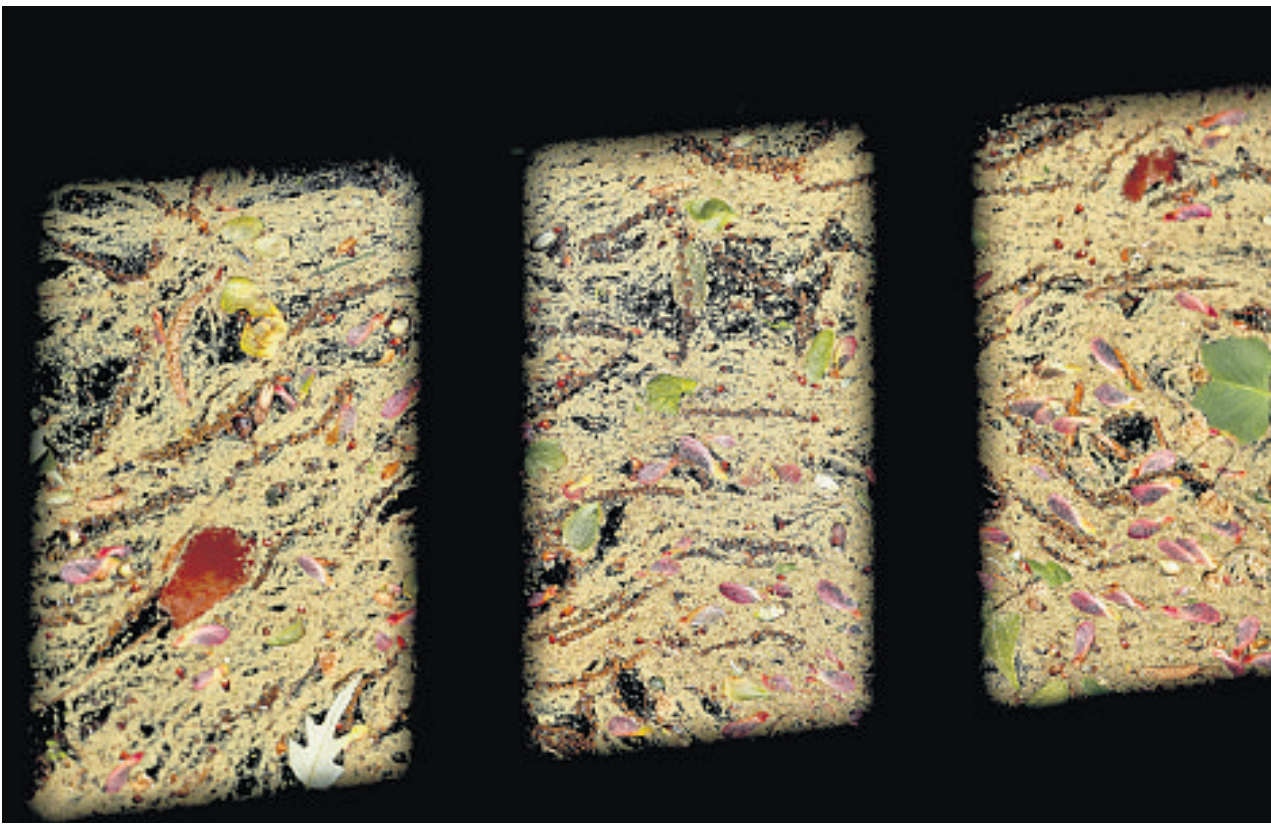

So what's a nose supposed to do?

Moore said there are plenty of precautions the allergic can take, like antihistamines, nasal sprays and nasal rinsing, but nothing shy of locking yourself in a bubble will totally prevent symptoms.

It's important to get a jump on the season, Moore said, so start taking your medications before it starts.

"When it's really bad, stay inside as much as you can, especially in the morning and evening when pollen peaks," Moore said.

Trump hints at moving ahead with sanctuary city plan

BY JILL COLVIN AND ALAN FRAM
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump suggested Monday that his threat to ship migrants to so-called sanctuary cities is taking effect, even though it remains unclear whether such a plan is feasible.

“Those Illegal Immigrants who can no longer be legally held (Congress must fix the laws and loopholes) will be, subject to Sanctuary Cities and States!” Trump tweeted just days after aides insisted the plan had been shelved.

Neither the White House nor Department of Homeland Security responded to requests for comment Monday. And it’s unclear whether DHS has taken any steps to implement the controversial plan. Lawyers there had previously told the White House that the idea was unfeasible and a misuse of funds. U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement is already strapped for cash.

White House press secretary Sarah Sanders had said during a pair of Sunday show appearances that the idea was just one option under consideration.

“Whether or not it moves forward, that’s yet to be determined,” she said on Fox, acknowledging that the idea had been rejected by DHS lawyers several times.

“The president heard the idea, he likes it, so — well, we’re looking to see if there are options that make it possible and doing a full and thorough and extensive review,” she said on ABC.

At the same time, Democrats on Monday asked the White House and agency officials for internal documents on the administration’s deliberations on its proposal to send detained migrants to “sanctuary cities” — cities and districts that don’t cooperate with federal immigration officials and which are mostly Democratic strongholds.

“Not only does the administration lack the legal authority to transfer detainees in this manner, it is shocking that the president and senior administration officials are even considering manipulating release decisions for purely political reasons,” read the letter, which was signed by House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerrold Nadler, D-NY; Oversight and Reform Committee Chairman Elijah Cummings, D-Md.; and Homeland Security Committee Chairman Bennie Thompson, D-Miss.

The letter said the plan seemed aimed at targeting Democratic areas “in a bizarre and unlawful attempt to score political points,” citing news reports.

The proposal was rejected twice by administration officials, but Trump has defended the idea.

“The USA has the absolute legal right to have apprehended illegal immigrants transferred to Sanctuary Cities,” Trump tweeted Saturday as part of his larger push to tighten immigration laws and try to stop the flow of migrants across the southern border.

The plan comes as the administration has said it’s been overwhelmed by a flood of migrant families, largely from Central America, attempting to cross the southwestern border. The U.S. Border Patrol said the number of families apprehended in March, 53,000, set a new record, though Democrats say the administration is worsening the problem by aggressively detaining people caught entering illegally and limiting the number of applicants for refugee status who are processed.

The letter requests by May 3 all relevant documents from Nov. 1, 2018, through Monday.

The letter was sent to Mick Mulvaney, White House acting chief of staff, and Kevin McAleenan, acting secretary of the Homeland Security Department.

Trump solution for Boeing MAX 8: ‘FIX’ and ‘REBRAND’

BY RACHEL SIEGEL AND AARON GREGG
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump began Monday morning on Twitter by offering a lesson in Branding101.

The test case: “If I were Boeing.”

Just weeks ago, as Boeing came under intense scrutiny for the safety of its 737 Max 8 planes, Trump asserted: “Airplanes are becoming far too complex to fly. Pilots are no longer needed, but rather computer scientists from MIT.”

But he took a different tack Monday when he said that if he were in charge of the American aviation giant, he would “FIX the Boeing 737 MAX, add some additional great features, & REBRAND the plane with a new name.”

“No product has suffered like this one,” Trump tweeted. “But again, what the hell do I know?”

The tweet stands in contrast with his earlier stance that the problem with air travel was that flying had become “far too complex.”

However, an aviation consultant who spent two years as marketing director for Trump’s ill-fated aviation venture, Trump Shuttle, described Trump as a “marketer’s marketer” who had little business expertise in airplanes or airlines.

Trump spent lavishly on gilded interiors for his company’s planes but wanted to cut corners on important safety issues, including an FAA requirement to have three pilots in the planes, Henry Harteveldt said.

“The 727 required three pilots but he at one point questioned why we needed the third pilot — the flight engineer— and we had to explain to him why you can’t just do that,” Harteveldt said.

Trump Shuttle ceased to exist after 1992 when it merged with another firm.

Boeing has come under intense scrutiny, from regulatory agencies and customers alike, since two 737 Max planes crashed within a five-month window, killing 346 people. But the special relationship between the 102-year-old company and the federal government made it all the more noteworthy for Trump to claim that “no product has suffered like this one.”

As The Washington Post reported last month, Boeing and the U.S. government have historically relied upon one another, “together creating hundreds of thousands of jobs, outfitting the United States with top military aircraft and supplying planes worldwide to allow the growth of passenger air travel and to boost U.S. exports.” Yet those close ties are being seen through a more critical lens as Boeing and U.S. regulators appeared slow to react to the March 10 crash of a Boeing 737 Max 8 jet in Ethiopia.

The president’s Monday morning tweet came four weeks into a worldwide grounding of Boeing 737 Max jets — a precaution that will likely drag on for some time. American Airlines said Sunday it was canceling flights on the aircraft through Aug. 19 while it waits for Boeing and the Federal Aviation Administration to fix and recertify the 737 Max’s flight-control systems. And United Airlines is canceling Boeing 737 Max flights through early July, CNBC reported.

As far as Trump’s suggestion that the 737 Max be fixed and rebranded: “You cannot just rebrand an airplane,” Harteveldt said. “Airplanes are not detergent or gum or aspirin.”

Some U.S. farm groups fear that President Donald Trump's terms for easing his trade war with China risk leaving large swaths of American agriculture worse off than before the conflict began.

Many producers are alarmed by signs that the administration would accept Chinese purchase target pledges for commodities like soybeans and pork without a promise to lift retaliatory tariffs, said industry representatives, some of whom spoke only on condition of anonymity to avoid consequences for publicly criticizing the administration.

"This is of great concern to producers out here facing another year of tariffs," said Mark Powers, president of the Northwest Horticultural Council, which represents cherry, pear and apple growers in the Pacific Northwest. "We're disappointed. Clearly the priority lies elsewhere."

Farmers are unnerved by Trump's enthusiasm for tariffs and his tendency to pick industry winners and losers, even as he promises in general terms to put "America first" in negotiations with the U.S.'s largest trading partner.

While China and the U.S. aim to finalize a trade truce within the next month, Trump is still vowing to maintain some tariffs as leverage for enforcement, which China would counter by continuing retaliatory duties on farmers despite possible purchase agreements for some commodities.

As recently as March 20, Trump said he envisions U.S. tariffs lasting "a substantial period of time" after a trade agreement takes effect. Hinting at what he considers a victory in this trade war, Trump also often promises "massive" new orders for farm exports.

"It's only going to get better because we're doing trade deals that are going to get you so much business, you're not even going to believe it," Trump said at the American Farm Bureau Federation annual meeting in January.

People familiar with the trade negotiations say there has been no agreement to remove retaliatory tariffs, and the issue is likely to be one of the last resolved. Several farm groups are quietly lobbying the administration to reject any agreement maintaining the agricultural levies but have not yet received any assurances from the White House.

"Our guys are being told, sorry, you guys are going to have to pay the price," Powers said. "It's a hard message to accept."

Many American farmers say today's economic pressure is the most severe since the farm crisis of the 1980s. Profits have been shrinking since they peaked six years ago and last year fell to half of what they were in 2013. Years of bumper crops sent prices for key commodities such as corn and soybeans plummeting -- down 40 percent since 2013.

Trump's determination to disrupt global trade abruptly compounded the financial damage last year.

In addition to China's tariffs, Mexico, Canada and India retaliated against U.S. producers after Trump targeted their steel and aluminum exports to the U.S. At the same time, competitors are making inroads in Japan, where the Trans-Pacific Partnership that Trump rejected has lowered duties for other Pacific Rim countries, and another trade deal eased access for European Union products.

Beijing in December committed to a series of U.S. soybean purchases and has used government entities to buy American pork. The Trump administration touts those promises as successes and said a U.S.-China trade deal would include additional purchase commitments.

Yet even those installments of soybeans won't be sufficient to put a dent in record U.S. stockpiles after last year's trade disruptions. And securing such purchasing commitments does little to help producers of other products still subject to retaliatory tariffs.

Ex-Volkswagen chief charged

Former Volkswagen head Martin Winterkorn was charged with serious fraud in Germany for his role in the diesel-rigging scandal that rocked the car-maker and cost it about $33 billion.

The former chief executive officer was accused alongside four other managers of equipping vehicles sold to customers in Europe and the U.S. with a so-called defeat device, authorities in Braunschweig said Monday in an emailed statement. Fraud charges carry a sentence of as long as 10 years, and prosecutors also want to seize bonuses paid to the five men, which ranged from 300,000 euros for some managers to about 11 million euros for Winterkorn.

The 71-year-old former CEO is also charged with breach of trust because of his failure to swiftly tell authorities about the devices, bringing higher fines for the company.

Stock market ends win streak

U.S. stocks halted a three-day advance mixed after disappointing results from Goldman Sachs Group Inc. and Citigroup Inc. dragged down bank shares. Crude slumped toward $63 a barrel in New York.

The S&P 500 index slipped from a six-month high as the U.S. corporate earnings season kicks into high gear. Goldman slumped 3.8 percent for the biggest drop in the Dow Jones Industrial Average after missing estimates for sales and trading revenue. Citigroup also retreated after its revenue matched expectations. The Bloomberg Commodity index slid as natural gas and crude futures retreated.

"The momentum is definitely in the US stock market, but the dramatic rise is looking a bit tired and in need of a few weeks break," Paul Nolte, a portfolio manager at Kingsview Asset Management, wrote to clients.

Best Buy names first female CEO

The executive credited with reviving a struggling Best Buy is stepping aside.

Hubert Joly, 59, is handing leadership of the reinvigorated electronics retailer to longtime executive Corie Barry, 43, as part of the company's succession plan effective June 11. Barry, who is the company's chief financial and strategic transformation officer, will become the fifth CEO in Best Buy's 53-year history.

Joly, who took over as CEO in 2012, the company is being reinvented, focusing on driving online revenue as well as improving the in-store experience as many traditional retailers face dwindling foot traffic and sales. Online sales now account for about 22% of Best Buy's business.

STORY STOCKS

U.S. stock indexes edged lower on Monday, pulled down by sinking bank stocks, and the S&P 500 fell for just the third time in the last three weeks. Goldman Sachs recorded one of the largest losses in the S&P 500 after describing a "muted start to the year." Banks are leading off what's expected to be the weakest earnings season in nearly three years. The S&P 500 nevertheless remains within 0.9% of its record.

Woods' win at Masters writes tale for the ages

NOTHING BEATS A compelling redemption story, and Tiger Woods authored one for the ages on the lush green turf of Augusta National Golf Course on Sunday.

Eleven years since his most recent win in a major championship tournament and two years removed from spinal surgery meant to allow him to walk without crippling pain, Woods marched his way through the final round of The Masters with skill and determination of his younger self.

As in years past, Woods made the shots when he needed them, his steely resolve once more on display.

As in years past, his competitors withered down the stretch, making critical mistakes and succumbing to the pressure of the moment.

And as in years past, the tournament ended with Woods atop the leaderboard, pumping his fist in celebration and donning the iconic green jacket — his fifth — as cheering patrons shouted in celebration and millions watching at home marveled at this most improbable of achievements.

This wasn't supposed to happen. It wasn't supposed to be possible.

Woods, arguably the most talented golfer in the game's long and storied history, had fallen in the world rankings to 1,199th in December 2017, following a series of nagging injuries that forced him to withdraw from regular competition and to consider retirement.

His body was once a perfectly sculpted machine seemed designed to hit golf balls, but it had betrayed him, with a series of knee, leg and back ailments that saw him spending more time with medical doctors and less with swing coaches.

It was a road that ultimately led him to a back institute in Texas in 2017, where doctors screwed a bone graft between two vertebrae to relieve pressure on his spinal cord. It was his fourth back surgery and the one likely to end his professional career.

After all, spinal fusion is an extreme procedure meant to provide a reasonable quality of life to those enduring extreme pain, not to prepare someone for the rigors to play any sport at an elite level.

But Tiger Woods was never a typical athlete.

He burst into the public consciousness in 1997 when he won the Masters by a then-record 12 strokes. It wasn't simply that he triumphed, but rather how convincing it was, a level of domination that sent notice of Woods' seemingly limitless potential.

His victory was also a powerful cultural statement. Who could have imagined a 21-year-old of African American and Asian ancestry atop a sport populated by white faces, often played at country clubs where he would not be welcomed as a member?

Woods would go on to win 13 more major championships heading into this year's Masters, good for second-most all-time. That includes the U.S. Open in 2000, which he won by 15 strokes, and the 2001 Masters, which was his fourth consecutive win in a major and marked the first time a golfer held all four major titles concurrently.

That level of dominance was unprecedented and may never be repeated. Woods was one of the most successful and iconic athletes in the world, a man who appeared from afar to have it all.

But Woods was also undone by his own poor choices and personal demons.

Revelations in November 2009 about a series of extra-marital affairs were followed by a high-profile divorce, and in 2017 he was charged with driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs and pleaded guilty to reckless driving.

However, even those setbacks made him more relatable, even if not more likeable. Sure, Woods had other-worldly talent, but he was also human, a man who made mistakes and who wanted to learn and atone for them.

In recent years, he spoke in genuine terms about wanting to be a good father. And, sure enough, he went quickly to his children on Sunday after sinking his final putt, eager to share the victory with them.

It was touching moment to complete a victory for the ages, and the final chapter in a compelling story of redemption, one we'll not soon forget.

Attorney on slippery slope

IT WAS RECENTLY reported that all pending (and most future) marijuana cases in Portsmouth will be dismissed, based on an edict issued by that city's commonwealth's attorney, Stephanie Morales.

We, the people, elect commonwealth's attorneys to prosecute alleged criminals, based on laws that are passed by our state legislators. Prosecutors are not granted the authority to decide which laws will never be enforced.

Morales has the right to refuse to assist the police in presenting misdemeanor cases in court. However, she does not have the authority to override an arresting officer's duty by dismissing charges that have been lawfully brought in good faith. Police officers can present these cases themselves, and do so in many jurisdictions, usually due to a shortage of prosecutors.

It is a slippery slope where individual prosecutors (or judges) are allowed to bypass the legislature and the police and force their personal prejudices down the throat of an entire community.

Possession of marijuana is the same class of misdemeanor as myriad other activities our legislature has deemed punishable by imprisonment and/or fine. Domestic assault, stalking, violation of a protective order are just a few examples.

What if Morales were to suddenly decide that one or more of those crimes is just too petty to prosecute?

Soft-peddling concerns

It's annoying that The Virginian-Pilot routinely soft-peddles the issues surrounding College Beach Weekend. Something in the Water is designed specifically to mellow the Beach College crowd that is not just unruly or loud; it is often disrespectful to local workers. Our local concerns are not racial, but behavioral.

When shops close early so their workers can get out of the area before dark and without being abused, when local condos are hiring security and when many residents talk about avoiding the area, we have a serious problem.

Is the answer to bring in a special event? Perhaps so. We'll see. I hope Something in the Water succeeds, because if it does not then the city needs — finally — to address a chronic problem that has not gotten better with time. The Virginian-Pilot needs to be more open and honest in its reporting.

Paul Emens, Virginia Beach

Designate a dog beach

We RV up and down the east coast and out to the national parks out west. We have a golden retriever who thinks every body of water was put there for her. She has been swimming in more than 27 states, all at designated dog swim areas. One of our favorites is Brohard Paw Park in Venice, Fla., a beautiful beach that you access by going through a regular dog park. They include a concrete pad with two water hoses to rinse off after your swim. What a delight for us and our dog.

The city of Virginia Beach has miles and miles of shore line. You would think it would be fairly easy to designate an area for off-leash swimming. I often thought of the beach on the southwest side of the Lesner Bridge near the city boat launch, but I am sure there are many other possibilities. With a designated dog beach, the north end of the resort beach could be leash-only all the time — a win-win.

Hope for climate help

Two recent editorials give me some hope: "Region joins rush to embrace wind energy" and "Critical step to protecting the bay." Thank you, city of Chesapeake, for pledging support for offshore wind energy production, and thank you, Gov. Ralph Northam, for insisting that Chesapeake Bay clean-up efforts be accelerated.

This planet we all call home is fragile and requires all of us to be good stewards. At the federal level, the current administration is taking every opportunity to take us backwards, not forwards. Fortunately, individuals and local/regional governments are charting their own way forward to save our home.

I'm old. I remember when President John F. Kennedy challenged the country to get a man on the moon by the end of the decade. And it was done, 50 years ago this July. When was the last time the American people were asked to support something so enormous? With today's technology we should be able to conquer our energy challenges and keep our planet healthy at the same time. As the sticker on my car window says, "Fossil fuels are so last century."

Nancy Gorry, Virginia Beach

A modest proposal

The well-publicized bad choices of Virginia's Gov. Ralph Northam, while he was still in medical school, are aberrations, not typical of educated Eastern Virginians. Only a certain group of survivalists clings to this region's former insularity and racial discrimination that produced Northam's now-dying breed of narrow views, a generation ago.

Since the era of the 1970s, many of our people have moved on, but we in Virginia have not reached the promised land quite yet, as the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. would have known instantly. His dream was still working itself out, and still is today.

Therefore, a modest proposal: That Bruce Smith (Virginia Tech's highly awarded athlete and NFL Hall of Fame honoree) be named Interim governor of Virginia, with former Gov. Gerald Baliles, University of Richmond President Emeritus Ed Ayers, Old Dominion University President John Broderick and University of Virginia President Emeritus John Casten as advisers. Yes, this is intended to be a working group, not a political sinecure. But they would be advisory; Smith would have the power.

Smith is the most successful athlete and business entrepreneur in Virginia's recent history. He has greater name recognition than any Virginian since Lt. Gov. J. Sargeant Reynolds who might have been president of the United States if he had not succumbed to a brain tumor in 1971.

OTHER VIEWS

Science still holds the power to amaze

FORGET EVERYTHING else for a moment and behold infinity.

On Wednesday, scientists unveiled a fuzzy image that should blow every mind on the planet: the first-ever picture of a black hole, which is a region of space so dense that nothing can escape its gravitational pull, not even light.

Black holes were predicted by Albert Einstein's theory of general relativity, and their existence has been inferred from decades'worth of indirect observation. But we've never actually seen one until now, and the experience is humbling.

Black holes, which are not rare — one lurks at the center of our own galaxy, the Milky Way — can be thought of as portals that lead to some other realm that lies forever beyond our reach. They are places where space and time cease to exist, where the familiar parameters that define our reality lose all meaning.

To see such an object is to gaze into the ultimate abyss. Dumbstruck awe is the only reasonable response.

The black hole in question, known as M87, lies at the heart of a galaxy far, far away — 55 million light-years distant, to be a bit more precise. That an international team of astrophysicists was able to snap its photo is a reminder that while so many of our institutions have lost their way and squandered the public trust, science is still capable of doing miraculous things.

To see M87, they needed a telescope as big as the earth itself. To simulate such a thing, they trained existing radio telescopes at eight widely separated sites around the globe on the target simultaneously, gathering mountains of data — so much that the files were too large to be sent through the internet and had to be shipped around on high-capacity hard drives. Winter observations from a telescope in Antarctica were delayed until the weather abated and the drives containing the data could be flown out.

All of that information was combined and analyzed, a process that took many months. The image that emerged was revealed at coordinated news conferences, including one at the National Press Club led by Shep Doleman of the Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics.

Another key member of the team was computer scientist Katherine Bouman, 29, soon to be an assistant professor at Caltech, who developed an algorithm that made it possible to combine the massive amounts of data produced by the participating telescopes. Those of us who believe in the power of diversity predicted that science would greatly benefit by opening its doors to women. We were right.

The greatest contribution, of course, came from Einstein. A century ago, he described gravity not as a force of attraction between masses (Isaac Newton's view) but as a warping of space-time. His equations made predictions that were counterintuitive and even preposterous — that the path of light from a distant source would be curved by passing near a massive object, for example, or that time would pass more slowly near a strong gravitational field. On all counts, however, he turned out to be right. Your mobile phone's GPS would send you careening into brick walls if compensation were not made for the time distortion that Einstein described.

But even Einstein was disturbed when Karl Schwarzschild, another German physicist, used the equations of general relativity to work out that if matter became too dense it would collapse into a black hole. The idea seemed absurd. But Schwarzschild's math turned out to be right.

How is it even possible to take a picture of a black hole against the inky blackness of space? How do you capture an image of nothing? It turns out that some black holes, including the massive M87, are surrounded by infalling material that circles rapidly like water going down a drain. All of that material reaches such high speeds that it forms a hot, glowing disc — a blazing doughnut around the voracious hole.

Which is exactly what M87 looks like. Just wow.

Humans are capable of epic screw-ups that endanger our very existence. But sometimes, somehow, we still get it right.

Ned Flanders metal band coming to Norfolk

By Stephanie Williams
The Washington Post

In the music world, heavy metal comes in many different forms. There's black metal, death metal — and even a subgenre inspired by Ned Flanders.

Yes, Ned Flanders — the ultra-religious, clean-cut character on TV's "The Simpsons," known for his cheery "Hi-Diddly-Ho" and "Okily Dokily" catchphrases that are bemoaned by next-door neighbor Homer Simpson. The cheeky genre's name is Nedal, a sound coined and — for now — solely produced by Phoenix band Okilly Dokilly.

Okilly Dokilly harnesses the abrasive sonic elements of sludge metal, akin to early Black Sabbath and Alice in Chains, but eschews doom-and-gloom lyrics in favor of quotes from the neighborly, overly friendly Flanders. As it turns out, a "Simpsons" metal band can indeed procure a large, dedicated fan base, and no one is more surprised than the lead singer himself, Head Ned.

"When we first started the band, we didn't think we'd have much of an audience," says Head Ned, who co-founded the quintet in 2015. But within a week after Okilly Dokilly released some demo tracks on Bandcamp that same year, the tunes garnered roughly a million streams and the band's newly created Facebook page amassed 25,000 fans. The band's tour includes a stop Thursday at Charlie's American Cafe in Norfolk.

The concept for Okilly Dokilly started as something of a gag. Head Ned wanted to form a metal band, but under the guise of something more playful and totally divergent from the genre's brutal trappings. The group's latest self-release, "Howdilly Twodilly," the follow-up to 2016 debut album "Howdilly Doodilly," is a testament to how this off-kilter juxtaposition comes together in a harmonious way. All of the record's 11 songs are packed with references to and sayings from the God-loving "Simpsons" character, yet they paint Flanders in a much different light.

"One thing that I look for when finding quotes is that if Ned Flanders says something out of context, how heavy metal is it?" Head Ned says. To find quotes for the new record, Head Ned went back and watched the first 10 seasons of the long-running animated series before writing the songs.

One example is the song "When the Comet Gets Here," a nod to a Season 6 episode in which Flanders hides in his homemade bomb shelter after learning that a comet is set to decimate Springfield. The shelter becomes overcrowded when more townsfolk discover its existence. After being nominated by Homer to leave due to overcapacity, Flanders willingly agrees to go, and tells his son Todd to "shoot Daddy if he tries to get back in." Okilly Dokilly spun the quote in a way that makes Flanders sound much more menacing.

Complementing the music is the band's complete dedication to looking the part. All five members, including drummer Dread Ned, guitarist Shred Ned, bassist Bed Ned and keyboardist Zed Ned, sport Flanders' hallmark green sweater, crisp pink polo, round glasses and, of course, his neatly trimmed mustache onstage. At shows, their fans often rise to the occasion and wear the same costume. Okilly Dokilly refers to these superfans as "Bonus Neds."

"We did a tour in the U.K. last year, and in London we had 25 people all dressed as Ned Flanders," Head Ned recounts. "The mosh pit was a heavy shade of green, and a bunch of the fans were having a hard time telling who was in the band and who was just a fan dressed as Ned Flanders!"

Okilly Dokilly has also caught the attention of "Simpsons" producers, who featured the band's video for "White Wine Spritzer" during the credits of this past Sunday's episode. Once the band finishes the U.S. leg of its tour, Okilly Dokilly will head to the other side of the globe to win over more fans.

"We're thinking of possibly going to Australia since there's another 'Simpsons'-themed band, Dr. Colossus, that we'd like to tour with," Head Ned says. "That's our goal — to take 'Howdilly Twodilly' and spread it as far as we can."

Trump ramps up Mueller report attack

BY MICHAEL BALSAMO
AND JONATHAN LEMIRE
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — As Washington counts down the final hours until publication of the redacted special counsel report — now expected Thursday — President Donald Trump stepped up his attacks Monday in an effort to undermine potential disclosures on Russia, his 2016 campaign and the aftermath.

He unleashed a series of tweets focusing on the previously released summary of special counsel Robert Mueller's conclusions — including a crucial one on obstruction of justice that Trump again misrepresented — produced by Attorney General William Barr.

"Mueller, and the A.G. based on Mueller findings (and great intelligence), have already ruled No Collusion, No Obstruction," Trump tweeted. "These were crimes committed by Crooked Hillary, the DNC, Dirty Cops and others! INVESTIGATE THE INVESTIGATORS!"

Press Secretary Sarah Sanders repeatedly tried to make the same case on TV talk shows on Sunday. But the political battle is far from finished over the special counsel's investigation of Russian efforts to help Trump in 2016 and whether there was cooperation with his campaign.

Democrats are calling for Mueller himself to testify before Congress and have expressed concern that Barr will order unnecessary censoring of the report to protect the president. The House Judiciary Committee, led by Rep. Jerry Nadler of New York, is poised to try to compel Barr to turn over an unredacted copy as well as the report's underlying investigative files.

The Justice Department announced Monday that it expects to release the redacted version Thursday morning, sending the findings of the nearly two-year probe to Congress and making them available to the public.

Mueller officially concluded his investigation late last month and submitted the confidential report to Barr. Two days later, the attorney general sent Congress a four-page letter that detailed Mueller's "principal conclusions."

In his letter, Barr said the special counsel did not find a criminal conspiracy between Russia and Trump associates during the campaign. However, contrary to Trump's false claim, Mueller did not reach a conclusion on whether Trump obstructed justice. Instead, Mueller presented evidence on both sides of that question. Barr said he did not believe the evidence was sufficient to prove that Trump had obstructed justice, but he noted that Mueller's team did not exonerate the president.

Portions of the report being released by the Justice Department will be redacted to protect grand jury material, sensitive intelligence, matters that could affect ongoing investigations and damage to the privacy rights of third parties, the attorney general has said.

The scores of outstanding questions about the investigation have not stopped the president and his allies from declaring victory.

They have painted House Democrats' investigations as partisan overreach and have targeted news outlets and individual reporters they say have promoted the

ADAM BETTCHER/GETTY
President Donald Trump and his allies continue to attack the origins of Robert Mueller's investigation,

But Trump's inner circle knows there will likely be further releases of embarrassing or politically damaging information. Barr's letter, for instance, hinted that there would be at least one unknown action by the president that Mueller examined as a possible act of obstruction. A number of White House aides have privately said they are eager for all Russia stories, good or bad, to fade from the headlines.

Trump and his allies also continue to attack the origins of the Russia investigation, portraying it as an effort by Democrats and career officials in the Justice Department to bring him down.

"The Mueller Report, which was written by 18 Angry Democrats who also happen to be Trump Haters (and Clinton Supporters), should have focused on the people who SPIED on my 2016 Campaign, and others who fabricated the whole Russia Hoax. That is, never forget, the crime." Trump tweeted Monday.

His long-asserted accusation — though not supported by evidence — that his campaign was spied upon was given new life last week when Barr, testifying before Congress, said he thinks "spying did occur" in 2016.

Barr later softened his tone to "I am not saying improper surveillance occurred."

In trademark case, justices treat label like a 4-letter word

BY JESSICA GRESKO
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — None of the Supreme Court's justices wanted to say the four-letter word.

The high court was discussing a trademark case Monday involving a Los Angeles-based fashion brand "FUCT."

But the justices did some verbal gymnastics to get through about an hour of arguments without saying the brand's name.

Chief Justice John Roberts described it as the "vulgar word at the heart of the case." Justice Samuel Alito called it "the word your client wants to use." And Justice Stephen Breyer called it "the word at issue."

The case has to do with a portion of federal law that says officials should not register trademarks that are "scandalous" or "immoral." Officials have refused to register the brand's name as a result.

But the artist behind the brand, Erik Brunetti, argues that portion of law should be struck down as an unconstitutional restriction on speech.

The government is defending the century-old provision, arguing it encourages trademarks that are appropriate for all audiences.

Lawyer Malcolm Stewart, who was arguing for the Trump administration, said the law is not a restriction on speech but rather the government declining to promote certain speech.

Stewart, for his part, also went to great lengths not to say the name of the brand, calling it "the equivalent of the profane past participle form of a well-known word of profanity and perhaps the paradigmatic word of profanity in our language."

Brunetti's lawyer, John R. Sommer, got the closest to saying the brand's name, noting his client's brand "isn't exactly" a "dirty" word.

"Oh, come on. You know, come on," responded Alito, adding: "Be serious."

It wasn't clear from arguments how the case might ultimately come out, but Brunetti would seem to have a strong case.

Two years ago, the justices unanimously invalidated a related provision of federal law that told officials not to register disparaging trademarks.

During Monday's argument, some of the justices seemed troubled by what they suggested are inconsistent decisions by the United States Patent and Trademark Office about what gets tagged as scandalous or immoral.

AUGUSTA, Ga. — No comeback by Tiger Woods was ever going to be complete without a major. Now the question becomes how many more he can win. So much appeal of that red shirt beneath a green jacket involved looking back at all Woods had to overcome to reach that moment — a Masters champion once again — that so many thought would never happen. The fourth surgery to rebuild his left knee. The private affairs that became public, shattering his image. The balky back that required four more surgeries, the last one out of desperation because he could barely walk, much less play golf. And a new generation of stars he inspired who were younger, stronger and capable. That's why Woods celebrated his 15th major like never before — fist pumps without a club in his hand, because he couldn't help himself walking off the 18th green. Virginia's DeAndre Hunter and Ty Jerome — a week after helping the Cavaliers win their first men's basketball NCAA championship — announced Monday they'll forgo their senior seasons and make themselves available for the NBA draft. Both announced their intentions on Instagram — Jerome in the morning and Hunter a few hours later. The news came after UVA's historic season that included a national title game victory over Texas Tech, an ACC regular-season title and 35-3 record. "DeAndre and Ty leave Virginia with tremendous legacies," UVA coach Tony Bennett said in a release. "They were outstanding players and role models, and I'm so proud of the men they have become. We won a lot of games and championships with DeAndre and Ty, and they are ready to realize their life-long dreams of playing in the NBA." Hunter, a 6-foot-7, 225-pound redshirt sophomore forward from Philadelphia, averaged 15.2 points and 5.1 rebounds this season. He was the NABC Defensive Player of the Year and a third-team All-American. He scored a game-high 27 points and made a crucial 3-pointer in the final minute of regulation in Virginia's overtime win against Texas Tech. Hunter is regarded as an NBA lottery pick, projected to be selected fifth overall by Atlanta in CBS Sports' latest mock draft and eighth by Washington in an nbadraft.net mock draft. Healthy this time, Luck dances through ‘best offseason ever’

BY MICHAEL MAROT

INDIANAPOLIS — Andrew Luck tossed around more dance moves than footballs this offseason.

He loved every minute of it.

So when the star quarterback returned to the Indianapolis Colts complex Monday, he was rested, recharged and ready to start offseason workouts.

“I finally got a chance to get away,” Luck said after the initial welcome back team meeting. “I talked to (general manager) Chris (Ballard) about that a little bit. He sort of challenged me to turn my mind off. It took a while, but I did get away. I feel refreshed. It was a very nice offseason.”

At least it was different.

Luck didn’t throw in either of the two previous offseasons, but not by choice. Instead, he followed doctor’s orders while recovering from surgery on his throwing shoulder. This time, Luck opted for a well-deserved break after perhaps the best season of his pro career.

Plus, Luck had other plans.

After dating Stanford gymnast Nicole Pechanec for nearly a decade, the couple finally married last month in the Czech Republic.

“Not much has changed besides a ring on the finger and she’s got great insurance now,” Luck cracked. “It’s awesome. It was the best day of my life and probably the best offseason I ever had.”

Luck also had fun shooting a commercial for sports drink company Body Armor. The addition of baseball star Mike Trout helped convince Luck to take a chance.

Dressed in 1970s disco garb, Luck and Trout cut it up on the dance floor — stirring up a conversation about Luck’s groovy moves. He even heard from Stanford coach David Shaw, who emailed that his children rewound the commercial multiple times when they first saw it.

“My initial reaction to just about everything is no,” Luck said. “Then I thought about it and talked to my agent. He said Mike Trout was interested and I admire him very much. Then thought about it and — why not? I think I feel much more comfortable making fun of myself than trying to be cool.”

He wasn’t the only Colts player to try his hand at performing.

All-Pro guard Quenton Nelson posted a video on Instagram of himself, bare-chested, mimicking the moves from a Cardi B video. The rapper and fans weren’t the only ones who were watching.

“I don’t know if Andrew was acting or not, but Quenton, I thought, was pretty good,” center Ryan Kelly said. “As long as he (Nelson) keeps mowing people over in the running game, I don’t care.”

Nelson did not speak Monday.

But Luck said he is eager to get back to work nearly three months after the 2018 season ended with a divisional-round loss at Kansas City.

The good news: Not much has changed inside the locker room.

Ballard spent the offseason investing heavily in keeping the roster intact. Three more Colts players — receivers Chester Rogers and Marcus Johnson and safety Mathias Farley — joined the list when they signed one-year tenders Monday.

Indy has re-signed six of 15 unrestricted free agents, with receiver Ryan Grant the only player heading out of town. He signed with Oakland two weeks ago.

Meanwhile, Ballard added only two newcomers, former Carolina receiver Devin Funchess and former Kansas City pass-rusher Justin Houston. Funchess gives Indy a bigger downfield threat. Houston brings a veteran presence to a young defense that improved dramatically under first-year coordinator Matt Eberflus.

“With me doing a little bit of pass rushing, hopefully he’ll help with how I use my hands, learning what moves to use here and what moves to use there,” All-Pro linebacker Darius Leonard said. “Hopefully, I can stay in his back pocket and learn from him.”

And now that the offseason is over, Luck can’t wait to see how much he can improve on the big stage.

“I haven’t thrown at all,” Luck said. “I’ll have a plan. Again, I have learned so many things over the past couple of years and part of that is building a plan and adjusting within it based on how you feel. We will certainly use the resources in the building and some other folks that help. So that’s a big part of this offseason as well.”

while nbdraft.net predicts he’ll go 26th to Cleveland.

“The last three years at Virginia have been everything I could have dreamed of in a college experience,” Jerome wrote in his post. “... I came to Virginia to win a national championship and to be able to do that with my brothers is a dream come true. And to the best fans in college basketball — we would not have done it without you.”

The NCAA in August passed legislation that permits any college basketball player to retain an agent after a season in which the player requests a draft evaluation from the NBA Undergraduate Advisory Committee. If a player wants to resume college competition, he must withdraw from the draft and terminate the agent relationship.

put me in a great position to be successful.”

Jerome, a 6-5, 195-pound junior point guard from New Rochelle, N.Y., averaged 13.6 points, 4.2 rebounds and an ACC-high 5.5 assists per game this season.

“After talking with my family and coaching staff and thinking about it a lot, I’ve decided to forgo my senior year in college and declare for the 2019 NBA draft,” Jerome said in his Instagram video.

Jerome also is projected to be a first-round draft pick. A CBS Sports mock draft has him selected 20th overall by the Boston Celtics,

THE MASTERS

Eye of the Tiger: How CBS covered Woods’ win

Nantz and crew made sure to let images tell story

BY JOE REEDY
Associated Press

Jim Nantz was told by the late Ken Venturi after Jack Nicklaus’ 1986 Masters win that he would never see a day like that around Augusta National again.

Nantz’s 34th Masters ended up being just as dramatic with Tiger Woods’ first victory in a major in nearly 11 years and his first green jacket since 2005.

“I think as far as pure elation and emotion, the scene around the 18th was the greatest thing I’ve ever been an eyewitness to,” Nantz said after Sunday’s broadcast.

Nicklaus’ win was Nantz’s first year with CBS as he was calling the action on the 16th hole. He moved to the host role three years later and has had a front-row seat to nine of Woods’ wins in a major.

CBS was a huge beneficiary of Woods’ win. They were on the air for 10 hours on Sunday because the final round was moved up due to possible inclement weather. CBS started at 9 a.m. and had six hours of live coverage followed by a four-hour recap show.

Director Lance Barrow said he found out about the early broadcast before going on the air Saturday. CBS sports chairman Sean McManus said that despite the time change, it still had the feel and drama of a final round at Augusta.

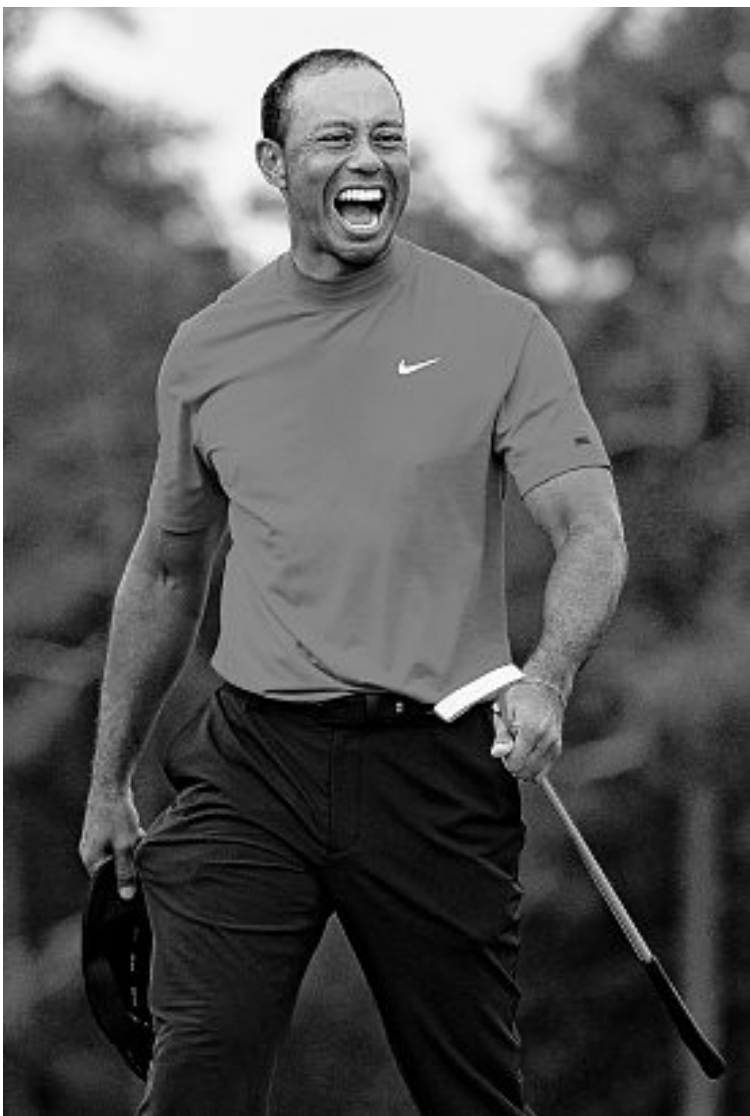

“During huge events like this, everyone steps up. I am very proud of what we did and it was a great broadcast,” McManus said.

When it comes to signature victories, Nantz noted there were plenty of differences between Woods’ victory Sunday, his first win in 1997 and Nicklaus’ rally.

“When Jack won, there were still a lot of players on the course. He was ahead of the lead groups, so he didn’t walk off the 18th knowing he had won it,” he said. “So, you didn’t have that celebration of the player and the game of golf in 1986 like you had here.”

In 1997, Woods had a nine-shot lead going into the final round with the only drama being if he was going to break the tournament’s 72-hole scoring record. Nantz said broadcast that day was more about storytelling and celebrating the social significance of Woods’ first major.

Nantz, along with Barrow and director Steve Milton, did a great job of letting the images of Woods celebrating with his family tell the story. Nantz was silent for two minutes, 42 seconds between the time he said, “the return to glory” after Woods sank his putt on the 18th hole and his family accompanying him back to the clubhouse.

Barrow also had the clip of Tiger hugging his father Earl after the 1997 Masters ready to go once the moment presented itself.

“I think what we saw today was such a human side of Tiger that if there were people that maybe weren’t the biggest Tiger fans in the world, I think today they saw a side of this,” Nantz said. “We didn’t see him as a loving dad because that’s been shielded from public view. To see his interactions with his children today, that was as rich as the sports moment because we haven’t seen that before. We saw it with his dad.”

Barrow and Milton also captured a prescient moment when Francesco Molinari was walking up to the 12th tee with a two-shot lead but looked nervous. Molinari’s tee shot would go into the water and opened the door for Woods.

“One of the great moments of any Masters is when the leaders walk from 11 to 12. I think you see a lot on the player’s faces,” Barrow said. “It is not a very long hole, but treacherous. A lot have stood there with the lead and it has ended up in disaster and that’s where it started for him.”

Nantz said that Molinari’s collapse was a bit jarring because he held his own against Woods at last year’s British Open and at the Ryder Cup. He added that once four of the last six players found the water on No. 12 “that I and everyone else knew that this was going to be Tiger’s historic day.”

What also made the day unique for Barrow and the crew was that they immediately got to relive the moment by doing the encore show.

A highlight of that show was Woods coming back to do a second interview at Butler Cabin with Nantz and Sir Nick Faldo. Barrow said CBS executive producer Harold Bryant mentioned that it would be great if they could get Woods again. Barrow called a representative from Augusta National. A couple minutes later, they called back and said Woods would be there in five minutes.

“We didn’t have a time to stop and catch our breath. We had two minutes after the Butler Cabin presentation to do the encore,” Barrow said. “You get to sit there and watch what you just did, which is unusual. When you’re working, you are focused hard on what you need to do and comprehending everything like someone sitting at home.”

without winning, and no sooner did he stretch his arms into that familiar green jacket — “Ah, it fits,” he said in Butler Cabin — was he asked about the 18 majors Jack Nicklaus won to set the gold standard in golf.

“I don’t know if he’s worried or not,” Woods said. “I’m sure he’s home just chilling and watching.”

Whether the record is in play, Nicklaus can expect plenty of questions. For years, he could rarely get through any conversation without someone asking him whether he thought Woods could top his mark.

“I thought for a long time that he was going to win again,” Nicklaus said Sunday night on Golf Channel. “The next two majors are at Bethpage, where he has won, and at Pebble Beach, where he has won. So, he has got me shaking in my boots, guys.”

The last part was delivered in jest. The first part was factual.

Woods winning his fifth Masters was not entirely out of the blue. He capped the year of his great comeback last year by winning the Tour Championship in typical Tiger fashion, by building a lead on a tough, fast course at East Lake and not giving anyone much of a chance. He also briefly led Sunday in the British Open, and was one shot behind on the back nine at the PGA Championship.

“The win at East Lake was a big confidence booster for me because I had come close last year a couple times,” Woods said. “Still have to get it across the finish line, and I didn’t quite do it.”

So, imagine the effect of winning the Masters, especially the way this one played out. Six players had at least a share of the lead at one point on the back nine — four of them major champions — and there was a five-way tie for the lead when the final group was in the 15th fairway.

It was anyone’s game until Francesco Molinari, who earlier hit 8-iron in Rae’s Creek on the 12th hole for double bogey, hit a wedge off a tree limb and into the water on the par-5 15th that led to double bogey.

And then it became Woods’ game — a two-putt birdie to take the lead, an 8-iron that rolled down the slope next to the hole for a signature moment at this Masters.

“Well, I can win majors now,” Woods said with a laugh.

The PGA Championship is a month away at Bethpage Black, where Woods was dominant as ever in going wire-to-wire in the 2002 U.S. Open, and was right there with a chance in the 2009 U.S. Open except for a putter that refused to cooperate.

And then it’s the U.S. Open in June at Pebble Beach. If the Masters is the most memorable of his 15 majors, Pebble Beach remains his greatest performance. Woods won there in 2000 by a record 15 shots, even with a triple bogey in the third round. Ten years later, he tied for fourth at the U.S. Open at Pebble, three shots behind.

The courses are familiar. But it’s not that simple.

Woods was 24 when he won the U.S. Open at Pebble, and 26 when we won at Bethpage Black. Now he’s 43.

As dynamic as this Masters was for Woods, it was hard work and he needed help — from Molinari on the 12th and 15th holes, from a couple of good bounces out of the trees. That’s not unusual.

Getting to 18 is only easier because Woods is one major closer, a conversation caddie Joe LaCava said they have shared.

“We’re on 14 and I said, ‘Let’s get to 15.’ You can’t be on 14 and thinking about 18,” LaCava said. “But now we can start talking about 16. So we’re getting closer.”

Nicklaus can only watch and admire, which he has done all along. And part of him is cheering.

“I don’t ever pull against anybody,” Nicklaus said. “Nobody wants their record to be broken. But I certainly wouldn’t want Tiger to be hurt and not to be able to do it. Of course, he is now pretty healthy and playing well. I wish him well, I always wish the guys well and I want them to pay their best.”

And that’s probably what everyone will expect from Woods the rest of the year.

Kenya's Lawrence Cherono, left, breaks the tape in front of Ethiopia's Lelisa Desisa to win the men's race in 2 hours, 7 minutes 57 seconds. Worknesh Degefa of Ethiopia claimed the women's prize with a time of 2:23:31.

Kenya's Cherono wins a close one; Ethiopia's Degafa finishes all alone

BY JIMMY GOLEN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Two-time Boston Marathon champion Lelisa Desisa turned onto Boylston Street with a sliver of a lead, leaning in front of two other runners with the finish line in sight. Unfortunately for him, one of them was the fastest man in the field.

Lawrence Cherono needed every bit of his speed to outkick Desisa in a sprint to the tape on Monday, passing him just steps away from the finish line to win the 123rd Boston Marathon in 2 hours, 7 minutes 57 seconds.

Desisa, who won in 2015 and 2013, the year the race was overshadowed by a bombing at the finish line, eased up after realizing he was beaten and finished 2 seconds back. Kenneth Kipkemoi was third, another 8 seconds behind.

"It was no man's race to win," said Cherono, who had won in Seville, Prague, Honolulu and twice in Amsterdam but never in a major marathon before. "I kept on focusing. And at the end, I was the winner. I'm so grateful, so happy."

Worknesh Degefa broke away from defending champion Des Linden and the rest of the women's pack in the Framingham flats and ran alone for the last 20 miles to claim the $150,000 first prize and a gilded olive wreath from Marathon, Greece.

The 28-year-old Ethiopian, who set a national record while finishing second in Dubai less than three months ago, won in 2:23:31. Kenya's Edna Kiplagat was second, reducing a gap of more than two minutes to 42 seconds at the finish.

American Jordan Hasay was third and Linden was fifth.

"Seeing Degefa go out — you know her ability, you know what she's done and you wonder how it translates to this course," Linden said. "But when she starts putting down those super quick miles, you say 'All right, this is her race to lose.' She becomes the outlier and you let her just go and hope that she might come back."

She didn't. Instead, she became the eighth Ethiopian woman to win the race and the third in seven years. A half marathon specialist, Degefa had never seen the Boston course before Monday.

"Last year, I watched all the marathon coverage," she said. "I kept that in my mind."

One year after an icy rain and a near-gale headwind resulted in the slowest winning times in four decades, race organizers again prepared for the foul New England weather. But overnight thunderstorms moved on before the runners left Hopkinton; the sun even made an appearance about halfway through.

Linden took advantage of last year's storm to splash her way to the first win for an American woman since 1985.

But with conditions back to normal, so were the results: East Africans from Kenya and Ethiopia dominating the podiums. At the 30K mark the lead pack was still close to a dozen and included three of the last four champions: Desisa, 2016 winner Geoffrey Kirui and '17 champ Lemi Berhanu Hayle.

A field of 30,000 runners followed the elites, embarking on the 26.2-mile trek from Hopkinton to Copley Square. It's the first time the race has been run on April 15 since the 2013 attacks; officials held a ceremony at 2:49 p.m. to honor those killed and maimed by the two pressure cooker bombs that exploded near the finish line.

Daniel Romanchuk, 20, became the youngest-ever men's wheelchair champion in Boston, finishing in 1:21:36 for the fastest time ever for an American. Manuela Schar won the women's wheelchair race for the second time, adding it to her titles in in Berlin, Chicago, New York and Tokyo.

If she wins in London in two weeks, she will have swept the World Marathon Major series.

Seven-time NASCAR champion Jimmie Johnson also competed in the race. He finished in 3:09:07. It's the fastest Boston Marathon ever run by a Daytona 500 winner.

Michael Waltrip ran Boston in 2000 and finished in 4:42:20. (Jamie McMurray has run two marathons, with a personal record at the Kiawah Island Marathon in 3:14:06, but never Boston.)

Hurricanes blank Caps, cut series lead to 2-1

Hurricanes 5, Capitals 0

RALEIGH, N.C. — Rookie forward Warren Foegele had two goals and an assist, Petr Mrazek earned his fourth career postseason shutout and Carolina won its first home playoff game in a decade, routing Washington on Monday night.

Dougie Hamilton also scored two goals, Brock McGinn had a late goal and an assist and Jaccob Slavin had two assists as the rapid-fire Hurricanes outshot Washington 45-18 to cut the defending Stanley Cup champions' lead to 2-1 in the best-of-seven series.

Mrazek finished with 18 saves in his fifth career playoff victory — the last four have been shut-outs.

Braden Holtby stopped 40 shots for Washington, which had its six-game postseason winning streak snapped. The Capitals were shut out in the playoffs for the first time since 2017.

Maple Leafs 3, Bruins 2

TORONTO — Auston Matthews scored his first goal of the playoffs and set up another as Toronto beat Boston to take a 2-1 lead in their best-of-seven Eastern Conference quarterfinal.

Andreas Johnsson, also with a goal and an assist, and Trevor Moore provided the rest of the offense for Toronto. Former Norfolk Admiral Frederik Andersen made 34 saves.

David Krejci and Charlie Coyle scored for Boston. Tuukka Rask stopped 31 shots.

The Maple Leafs won the series opener 4-1 last Wednesday in Boston before losing by the same score Saturday. Game 4 is Wednesday night in Toronto.

Less than an hour before puck drop, the Maple Leafs learned center Nazem Kadri had been suspended for the rest of the series for his cross-check to the head of Bruins winger Jake DeBrusk late in Game 2.

Simmons, Sixers rebound to even series with Nets

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Ben Simmons had 18 points, 12 assists and 10 rebounds for a triple-double, and the Philadelphia 76ers had an answer for the pesky Brooklyn Nets in a 145-123 win to even their Eastern Conference playoff series Monday night.

Simmons had a disastrous Game 1, on the court (nine points) and off after he criticized fans for booing during a game the Sixers were never really in. He backtracked the next day at practice and never gave another 20,591 fans a chance to do anything but roar in approval in Game 2. Simmons flashed the All-Star form that helped lead the Sixers to 51 wins, and was aggressive from tipoff. He used his size and speed to attack the lane and scored 16 points in the half.

The Sixers busted the game open with a 14-0 run to start the second half and then stretched the lead to 20 on a Simmons steal and fastbreak basket. Philadelphia went on to outscore the Nets 51-23 in the third quarter before cruising to victory.

Ready for new heights, Zion declares for draft

DURHAM, N.C. — Zion Williamson is leaving Duke after one high-flying season to enter the NBA draft.

Widely projected as the top overall pick in the June draft, the AP national player of the year announced his decision Monday.

Zion Williamson

The 6-foot-7, 285-pound Williamson captivated college basketball with his freakish, once-in-a-generation athleticism, his energy at both ends of the floor and his omnipresent charisma.

The ACC player and rookie of the year averaged 22.6 points — tied for the league lead with teammate RJ Barrett — and 8.9 rebounds. He became the face of college basketball this season, routinely coming up with at least one highlight-reel play or show-stopping dunk per game.

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — The Sacramento Kings hired Luke Walton as their coach just days after the Los Angeles Lakers parted ways with him following three losing seasons.

The Kings announced Monday that Walton will replace Dave Joergel. Sacramento general manager Vlade Divac fired Joergel last week following a 39-43 finish that was the best record for the franchise in 13 years.

The 39-year-old Walton was dismissed by the Lakers on Friday after Los Angeles went 37-45. He went 98-148 in three years with Los Angeles in his first full-time head coaching job. The former Golden State top assistant never led the Lakers to the playoffs, not even after the arrival of LeBron James last summer.

Dodgers honor centennial year for No. 42

His children, widow attend celebration

By BETH HARRIS

LOS ANGELES — Vin Scully joined the widow of his friend Jackie Robinson to honor the player who broke baseball's color barrier during Robinson's centennial birthday celebration.

Scully was a surprise attendee for pre-game ceremonies at Dodger Stadium on Monday night.

Robinson's 96-year-old widow, Rachel, was joined by the couple's daughter, Sharon, and son, David, on the field.

Robinson became the first black player in Major League Baseball with the Brooklyn Dodgers on April 15, 1947. Scully began calling the team's games three years later, and the now-retired Hall of Fame announcer was friendly off the field with the man he called "Jack."

Robinson, who died at age 53 in 1972, would have turned 100 on Jan. 31.

His No. 42 was worn by every major leaguer Monday. The number was retired around the major leagues in 1997.

Big 6th inning lifts Tides to second straight win

Associated Press

NORFOLK — Ryan Mountcastle hit a two-run single in the sixth inning Monday, leading the Norfolk Tides to a 10-6 win over the Durham Bulls in the opener of a four-game series at Harbor Park.

Mountcastle's single followed an RBI single by DJ Stewart and fueled a six-run inning. The Tides trailed 6-4 entering the frame.

Mountcastle, the No. 2 prospect in the Orioles system, and Stewart also hit back-to-back homers to lead off the third. Mountcastle's homer was his first at the Triple-A level. Stewart has three home runs this season.

Matt Wotherspoon (2-0) got the win with three innings of scoreless relief while Colin Poche (0-1) took the loss.

Norfolk took advantage of some erratic Durham pitching, drawing a season-high six walks on the way to its second straight win and third in four games.

The Tides' 10 runs and 13 hits are a season high.

Nate Lowe, a Norfolk native who played high school ball in Marietta, Ga., before collegiate play at Mercer, St. Johns River State and Mississippi State, doubled twice for the Bulls. Michael Brosseau doubled and singled, driving in two runs.

The teams meet again at 6:35 tonight.

Smith, Davis homer as O's rout Red Sox to salvage series split

BY KEN POWTAK
Associated Press

BOSTON — Chris Davis knows his homer went a lot further than teammate Dwight Smith Jr.'s two-run shot. He also knows he'll have his time to gloat.

Smith hooked his homer into the first row of seats down the right field line in the fifth inning and drove in a total of four runs Monday, leading the Baltimore Orioles past the Red Sox 8-1 in Boston's annual Patriots' Day game.

"He's been really doing well, there's no reason to talk," said Davis, smiling. "I'll wait a little bit and talk."

Davis also had a two-run shot — estimated just short of 100 feet longer than Smith's — projected at 408 feet into the right-field bleachers in the eighth.

"Honestly, I had no clue if it was going to get over," Smith said of his drive. "Whoever caught it might have helped me out, honestly. A homer is a homer. I'll take it anyway."

Asked about Davis' shot, Smith said: "He crushed it. That's his name — 'Crush' — for a reason."

Renato Núñez had three hits with an RBI single for Baltimore, which salvaged a split of the four-game series. It had lost nine of its previous 11 games and was 4-21 in its last 25 against Boston.

Davis halted a record 0-for-54 stretch Saturday, the longest ever for a position player. He started the season 0 for 33.

It was the 60th straight year the Red Sox were scheduled to play on the holiday. The defending World Series champs completed a 3-3 homestand and have yet to win one of their five series this season.

"It doesn't concern me. It's just a bad start," Boston manager Alex Cora said.

Orioles rookie manager Brandon Hyde got his first ejection, tossed by crew chief Mark Wegner after his challenge on the "slide rule" at second base was upheld. Hyde said he knew he was going to get thrown out.

"To me, they just made a wrong decision," Hyde said. "I didn't agree with the decision in New York at all."

ressed, getting closer, I've just gotten more confident that I could do it and then it happened."

Richard Hunter, who coaches Tadder at TIDE Swimming, has worked with plenty of athletes who attended the Olympic Trials before, and knows what Tadder needs to do to give her best performance.

"It's a different meet and it's a little bit different preparation for the younger athletes," Hunter said. "It's keeping them focused on themselves and yes, you have these superstars around you, but ultimately you have water and you have your lane and that's all you can control."

"That's the biggest thing, trying to get them to understand that this is a huge experience and opportunity, but it's a swim meet, and you've had how many swim meets in your life?"

Wilburn, a Notre Dame signee, set Class 6 championship records in February in winning the 200-yard freestyle (1:35.93) and the 100 butterfly (48.13 seconds) state titles. Wilburn, who is biracial, recalls watching Olympic gold medalist Colin Jones and feeling a sense of inspiration that he hopes others will get by watching him.

"I'm hoping that people will want to watch (the Olympic Trials on TV) and see me and be like, 'Oh, that swimmer looks like me. Maybe if he can do it, I can do it,'" Wilburn said. "Because that's what happened with me."

Eric Landon, who coaches Wilburn with the East Coast Aquatic Team (ECAT), has had a front-row seat for Wilburn's growth over the past three years.

"It's been an honor to be able to coach (Cason)," Landon said. "With a swimmer like Cason, I learn from him as much as I hope he learns from me. It helps everyone to grow in the sport as well. Putting everything together to have the performances that he had is a benefit to everyone."

At ECAT and TIDE, coaches believe Tadder and Wilburn's success will help pave the way for future South Hampton Roads swimmers looking to accomplish similar goals.

"For Sam's teammates now, they can say, 'I come to the same pool and I train in the same program that this person who's achieving at high levels is at, so what's to prevent me from making those steps if I'm willing to make that commitment?'" Hunter said. "When (all the work) does come together, it shows people that, hey, I may not be there yet but look, this person is, and I do want to strive for that."

LOCAL REPORT Norfolk State picks Jamerson, Bissah as athletes of the year

NORFOLK — Cross country and track and field athlete Martha Bissah and basketball player Derrik Jamerson were named Norfolk State Female and Male Athlete of the Year at the school's year-end ceremony Monday night.

Bissah, a junior from Ghana, collected the honor for a third consecutive year after winning her second straight MEAC cross country individual championship and collecting indoor track titles in the 800 meters and mile for a third time.

Bissah also earned first-team NCAA Division I All-America honors in the 800 with a fifth-place finish at the indoor nationals. She became NSU's first indoor female track All-American since Debbie Dunn in 2000.

Jamerson, a senior from Detroit, was part of an NSU team that won the regular-season MEAC men's basketball title and upset No. 1 seed Alabama in the opening round of the NIT.

Jamerson was a second-team All-MEAC and NABC all-district selection after averaging 10.4 points and 3.9 rebounds per game. He was the top 3-point shooter in Division I, hitting 49.7 percent of his attempts.

Jamerson's 92 3-pointers are a school record in Division I and in just two seasons with the Spartans finished in the top five in school history in 3-pointers made and 3-point percentage.

Also Monday, junior volleyball player Anna Rupertova and junior baseball player Caleb Ward were honored as the department's Female and Male Scholar Athletes of the Year.

BASEBALL NSU's Womack is MEAC Player of the Week

NORFOLK — Norfolk State's Alsander Womack, the nation's leading hitter with a .463 batting average, was named the MEAC Player of the Week.

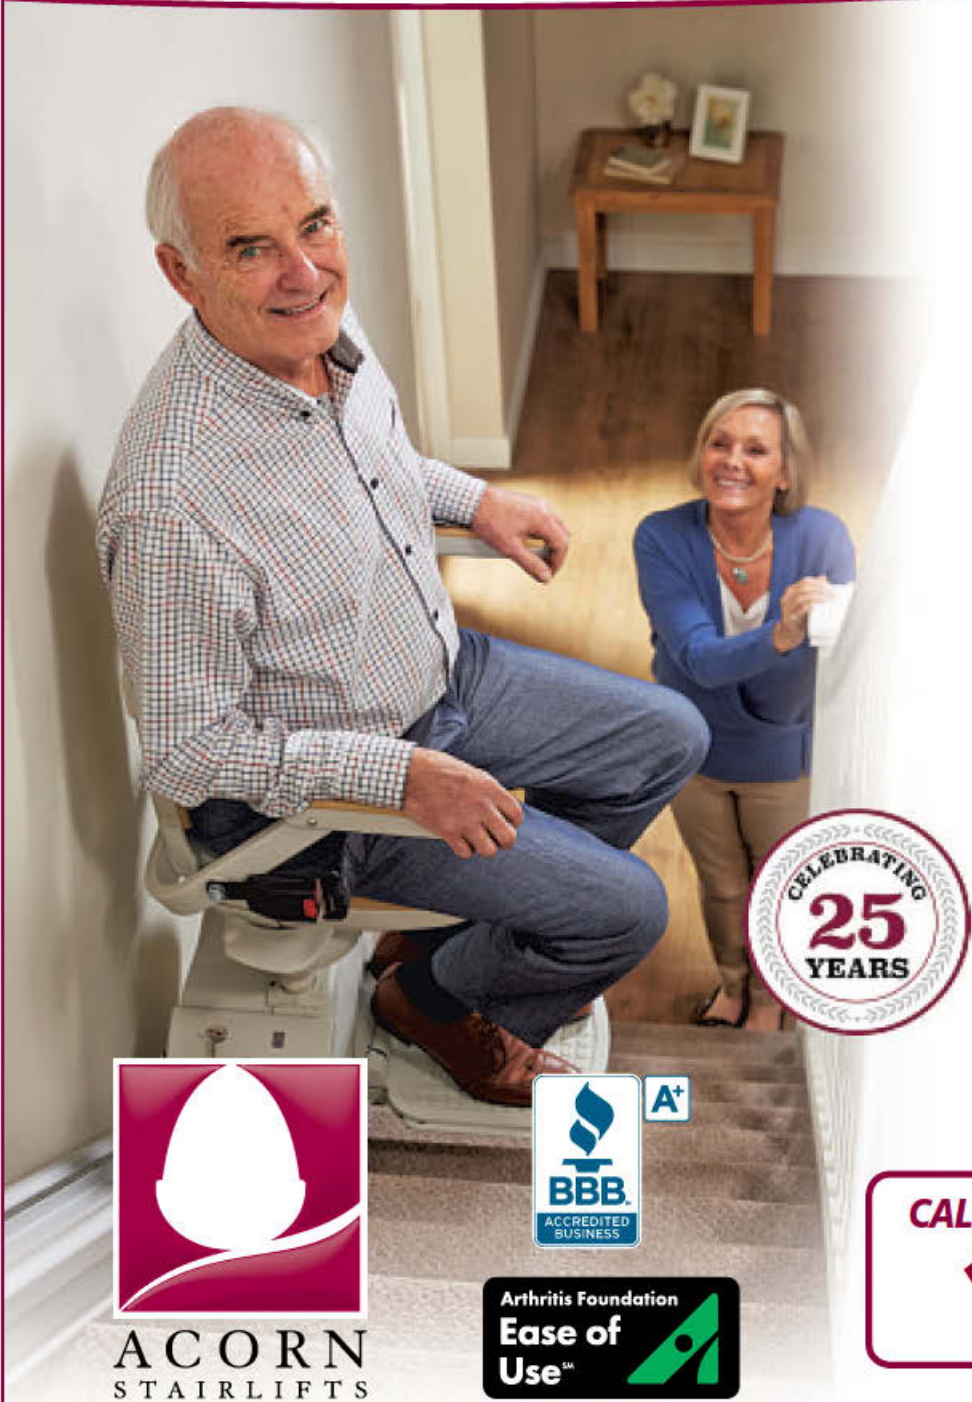

The sophomore infielder hit .667 (12 for 18) with 11 RBIs last week as the Spartans went 3-1, including a high-scoring weekend sweep of Maryland-Eastern Shore.

Womack, who's on a 19-game hitting streak and has at least one hit in 23 of 24 games played, picked up the honor for the second time this season.

The Spartans host Coppin State for three games beginning at 3 p.m. Friday.

North's three-spade bid showed a useful hand, as he would have jumped to four spades with a bust. South jumped to slam when North was able to show a diamond control. Not the greatest slam, but not much worse than a successful heart finesse.

South won the opening trump lead in hand with the seven. He then led a diamond to the king, a diamond back to his ace, and ruffed a diamond. Had the queen and jack of diamonds not fallen, he would have been forced to take the heart finesse at this point. They did fall, however, so he considered other options. Why had West led a trump rather than a heart? There had been no heart cue bid in the auction. He might well have led a heart with no honor in the suit. South decided that West probably held the king of hearts so he ran all of his trumps. This was the position:
